PROFESSOR JOHN POLESEL

Professor John Polesel is a coordinator of Graduate Coursework Programs in the Melbourne Graduate School of Education at the University of Melbourne. He manages a range of research projects focussing on upper secondary education and transitions from school. His research interests include issues of inequality, the relationship between schools and vocational training, models of education and training, and youth transitions systems in Australia and internationally. He is currently leading an Australian Research Council (ARC) study of the partnerships schools form in order to deliver vocational programs and a destinations survey of NSW secondary school students for the NSW Government.

ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR LEESA WHEELAHAN

Leesa Wheelahan is an associate professor at the Melbourne Graduate School of Education and the LH Martin Institute for Tertiary Education Leadership and Management at the University of Melbourne. Her research projects focus on student pathways, transitions and outcomes within post-compulsory education and training, vocational education and training policy and practice, student equity, qualifications frameworks and the role of knowledge in curriculum. She is currently leading a national three-year project funded by the National Centre for Vocational Education Research on improving pathways and transitions within and between education and work.
